previously Director of the Centre for Applied Legal Studies, Wits

For better and for worse, the 'decolonial turn' has made its mark on almost all areas of the social sciences. While most scholars are agreed that 'decolonization is not a metaphor', most proponents of decoloniality and decolonization often do not identify constituent powers or movements that can drive or have driven material decolonization. There is a dearth of scholarship on what we may call 'everyday strivings for decolonization'; that is, decolonization struggles outside of the epochal and the spectacular. This talk is concerned with how some movements of oppressed and 'invisibilised' people engage in everyday struggles for
